FOREWORD

This directory of former students and graduates of the H. H. Herbert School of Journalism is published as part of the 50th Anniversary observance of the School.

Compiling and editing the data have been an enormous task. Questionnaires were mailed months ago to alumni, requesting specific information as to home addresses and positions held. Hundreds of hours have been spent searching carefully through files in the Journalism office, as well as those in Sooner State Press, the Alumni Association, and the office of Admissions and Records of the University of Oklahoma. Many details were supplied by faculty members.

However, in spite of the editors' high regard for truth and accuracy, omissions may have occurred or wrong information may have been listed. Any additions or corrections which would bring the information up-to-date will be appreciated. Supplementary material will be entered on alumni cards for future directories.

The editors hope the directory will be a pleasure to read and a valuable source of information.

The Editors

A Brief History of the First 50 Years

Fifty years ago the State Board of Education approved the organization of the OU School of Journalism within the College of Arts and Sciences. H. H. Herbert, a 24-year-old newspaperman from Illinois, was hired as a faculty of one. However, as early as 1908, a course in journalism had been offered, listed simply as English 33. This course included fundamentals of newspaper work, organization of the city room and the duties of the reporter. Professor T. H. Brewer of the English department and Professor Jerome Dowd of the Sociology and Economics department alternated as teachers of this course.

In the fall of 1913 the School was housed in a small barnlike structure on Park Row, where three rooms had been made available. A succession of moves to the Law building, into the basements of the old Carnegie building, now known as the Faculty Exchange, and the Science Hall, now used by the Drama School, found the School occupying new quarters almost each year. Later, the School shared a wing of the Genetics Laboratory with the University of Oklahoma Press. The School moved into its modern 3-story building in 1958. Many state publishers and editors, alumni and friends provided a substantial part of the $604,000 which made a 38-year-old dream a reality.

Journalism was offered as a major in 1926. Previously, BA degrees had been granted in arts and sciences with certificates in journalism. The first designated BA degrees in journalism were conferred on 18 seniors in 1935. Graduate work has been offered since 1930. A total of 1,443 students have earned BA degrees and 65 have received MA degrees during the School's first fifty years.

Since the national accreditation program went into effect in 1947, the School has been approved three times, the latest in 1963. Approved curricula offer 52 courses in five areas of advertising-business, general editorial, news-advertising, professional writing, and public relations studies.

The School's undergraduate scholarship aid program is unmatched anywhere. During the 1963-1964 year, grants and awards totaled some $16,000.

Two men who played vital parts in the School's program were honored in 1961. The School was named the H. H. Herbert School of Journalism in honor of its founder, now professor emeritus and retired since 1959. At the same time, the building was named Copeland Hall in memory of Dr. Fayette Copeland, director of the School from 1947 until his death on May 1, 1961.

An essential part of the history of the School is contained in the faculty and students themselves. Hundreds of former students and graduates are pursuing successful careers in the field of communications. They include newspaper editors, publishers, reporters and columnists; magazine staff members; foreign correspondents; workers in advertising, radio and television; newsmen in AP and UPI; political leaders and public servants; administrators; journalism educators; and fiction writers and novelists.
